the rider of the horse.

"Paul (Stone) created mock-ups of his artwork, then an electronic file so Chris at Art's Custom Metal Designs — part of A.W. Brueggemann Co. — could plasma cut the artwork out of sheet metal," she said. "It was amazing to see a piece of art come to life."

The metal pieces then traveled to Scorpion Coatings of Oklahoma, where they were coated with a durable high-grade polyurethane bed liner material, Tompkins said. The material will provide a barrier against corrosion and rust.

"Public art creates community attachment, reflects our history, looks to the future and promotes tourism," said Tompkins in an email. "People like to spend time where there are interesting, aesthetically-pleasing and cultural things to enjoy, and people spend money where they spend time. Public art is an economic enhancer, as well as a happiness inducer."

The mural was completed and installed Nov. 18 by Dierksen Buildings.

Oklahoma Farm Bureau welcomed four legislators from Northwest Oklahoma as inaugural members of its caucus.

Rep. Chad Caldwell, R-Enid; Rep. John Enns, R-Enid; Rep. John Pfeiffer, R-Mullhall; and Sen. Roland Pederson, R-Burlington; will be members of the non-partisan group.

The caucus is focused on fostering fellowship and "discussion of agricultural and rural police issues," according to a release. The caucus mainly is comprised of Farm Bureau members in the state Legislature.

"As Oklahoma continually becomes more urban and less rural, it's important for those who value agriculture and the rural way of life to join forces," said Tom Buchanan, OKFB president, in a written statement. "This group is designed to ensure farmers and ranchers, and rural Oklahoma, continues to thrive into the future.'

Farm Bureau is an independent, non-governmental organization of farm and ranch families who create a plan of action to achieve educational and economic improvement, along with

The legislators were sworn into office during a ceremony at the Capitol on Nov. 16.

The Senate and House will host a one-day organizational meeting Jan. 3. The deadline for filing pieces of legislation is Jan. 19. As of press time, two Senate bills, two Senate joint resolutions and no House bills had been filed with the state.

The 2017 legislative session starts Feb. 6.
